Screen Time Is Not Forever

As important as screens are in our lives, we all need to unplug, especially children. This active, encouraging picture book offers young children and families an easy way to set boundaries and limits for screen time, and helps readers find enjoyable ways to spend time without screens, such as playing, moving, singing, and having fun with friends. Children also learn basic internet safety, like only chatting online with people you know in real life and never sharing personal details online. A special section for adults offers additional research on the effects of screen time, information on online safety, and more ideas for screen-free activities.

How many screens do you see?

That many?

Screens help you learn and have fun. So much fun, it's easy to forget the button for "Off."

(Grown-ups forget too!)

Screen time is not forever.

Screens are for learning and downtime. And then it's turn-it-off time.

Push the button or shut the top . . .
make the screen STOP.

Take a break

Off

All done

Screen time is one little part of your life.

Here are some BIGGER parts:

Family time

Friendships

Sleeping

Reading

Playing!

Families need
face-to-face time—
turn-off-the-tech time.

But families
also want some fun
screens-on time—
so make it
watch-together time!

About an hour before bedtime, say,
"See you later, screens."

Screen lights keep you alert and awake.

Give your eyes and brain a break.

When you're on the move, you can keep the screens off. Think of travel as talking time, sing-along time . . .

watch-the-wider-world and goodbye-gadget time.

So, when do you get some screen time?

You and your family can make a schedule, like this:

My screen time today is:

4:00 pm-5:00 pm

- ✓ after schoolwork
- ✓ after exercise
- ✓ after chores
- ✓ for one hour or less

A schedule gives you a start and stop.

Screen time can be fun-and-learning time.

DO . . .

- ▶ Video chat with friends and family
- ▶ Use media with others
- ▶ Find educational apps, games, and shows
- ▶ Ask if you're allowed to visit a website or download games or apps

But please DON'T . . .

- ▶ Download apps or games without an adult's help
- ▶ Play or watch violent video games
- ▶ Sneak extra screen time
- ▶ Break the screen rules when you're away from home

Screen time should be a safe time.

Does your family know about staying safe online?

You can learn the rules together . . .

Six screen-time safety rules:

1. We only chat or play games online with people we know in real life.

2. We only share texts and photos online with people we know in real life.

3. We don't share personal details online.

4. We don't bully online.

5. We are kind to others online.

6. We let a grown-up know if anything we see or hear online makes us feel unsafe.

You're off to a great start,
becoming screen-time smart!

Remember, screen time is not forever.
Let's spend more time TOGETHER!

Screen Time Is Not Forever

Book Summary

This book provides a series of vignettes sharing ways to use the screens in our lives in appropriate ways. Screen time safety tips and guidelines for healthy habits offer multiple ways to use screens in positive ways.

Life Skills Focus

Finding a balance with screen time has become more and more challenging. This book helps the class identify and discuss what that balance looks like.

 Self-Awareness	 Self-Management	 Social Awareness
Have students respond to the following writing prompt: When I stare at a screen too long, I feel... Then, lead a group discussion about some of the common side effects of too much screen time. Some examples are: trouble sleeping; headaches; dry, achy eyes; and a lack of focus. Ask students to check off which side effects they have felt before.	Ask students if they have ever been tempted to sneak some extra screen time when an adult is not paying close attention. Have students brainstorm ideas that they could use to help them follow the rules. Then, have them write their favorite ideas on sticky notes and post them in their rooms at home to help them remember to follow the rules.	Ask students how they feel when they're trying to get the attention of someone who is using a phone or a tablet. Create a T-chart for students to add some do's and don'ts for getting an adult's attention. A few do's might be to wait until they are finished with what they are doing, to say their name one time, or to make eye contact. A few don'ts might be to say their name over and over, to pull on their clothes, or to shout at them.
 Relationship Skills	 Responsible Decision-Making	 Reading Comprehension
Discuss with students how screens can be a way to connect with people who don't live near them. Have students draw pictures of a time they used a phone, tablet, or computer to connect with someone far away.	Finding a balance between spending time on and off screens is important for young learners. Encourage each student to talk with an adult at home to set up a smart screen-time limit. This could be a certain amount of time per day, or it could be setting a window of time when screens can be used. Have students draw pictures of activities on a scale to show how they plan to balance their screen time. (A scale template is provided in the digital resources.)	Have students compare and contrast the benefits and challenges that come from screen time. Write their ideas in a Venn diagram on the board or on chart paper. Then, have students complete Venn diagrams comparing and contrasting screen activities with outdoor activities. (A Venn diagram template is available in the digital resources.)

Outside Activities

The form consists of a large rounded rectangular container divided into three horizontal sections. The top section is labeled 'Screen Activities', the middle section is labeled 'Both', and the bottom section is labeled 'Outside Activities'. Each section is currently empty, intended for the student to write their answers.

Building Connections: Take-Home Activities

Hello,

Recently, we read Screen Time Is Not Forever in class.

Have your child lead you in these fun activities based on the book. You will see how much your child has learned, and you can help your child reinforce their learning about screen time.

- Counting: Go through your house and count the number of screens. Include TVs, computers, phones, tablets, and any other electronics with screens. Do you think this is too many, not enough, or the right amount? Talk it over with your family.
- Discussion: Talk with a family member about screen time limits. Let them share their thoughts. Discuss the ways screen time can help and hurt people.

Sincerely,

Extension Opportunities

Student Pages Overview

As students listen to and explore different books, the following activity pages provide opportunities for them to dig deeper into both reading and writing skills. These pages are designed to be used with any of the books. Allow 10–15 minutes for students to complete each of the activities. They will only need basic classroom supplies, such as pencils and crayons. If time permits, encourage students to share their work with partners or the whole group.

Activity Title	Description
Comic Strip (page 23)	Students draw important events from the book as comic strips.
Describing a Character (page 24)	Students choose words to describe characters and themselves.
Change It Up (page 25)	Each student draws a picture of one change they would make in the book and writes a sentence about it.
Setting (page 26)	Each student draws a setting from the book and writes about it.
Book Share (page 27)	Each student chooses one person to share the book with and draws a picture of them reading together.
The Best Part (page 28)	Students draw and write about their favorite parts of the book.
A New Cover (page 29)	Students create new covers for the book.
Rate This Book (page 30)	Students rate the book, explain the reasons for their ratings, and draw pictures of their favorite characters.
Write About It (page 31)	Students write about how the book made them feel and what they learned.

Take-Home Letters

Take-home letters pertinent to each book are available in the digital resources. These letters extend learning beyond the classroom with suggestions for additional activities based on the books. See page 32 for details on how to access these resources.
